Wagner named Principal

NEW MCGILL PRINCIPAL Claude Wagner celebrates appointment with his wife.

Claude Wagner is the new principal of McGill University. The stunning decision was the result of a marathon meeting of the McGill Board of Governors which lasted until 2:30 am this morning.

According to retiring principal H. Roche Robertson, the sudden appointment of the former Justice Minister was a result of compromise between various factions of the Board.

"It was a very difficult decision," said Dr. Robertson, "and was only reached after much soul-searching."

Mr. Wagner is a graduate of Brébeuf College and College

by LUCIEN RIVARD

Militaire Royale. He served as Justice Minister in the Lesage cabinet and was recently defeated by Robert Bourassa for the leadership of the Quebec Liberal Party.

He has a LID from Heidelberg, and honorary degrees from McGill, Université de Montréal, Queen's and the American University of Beirut.

When contacted late last night by The Daily, Mr. Wagner was unaware of the surprise decision.

"What can I say but that I shall try to do my best for the people of McGill and the students."

"This comes at a very opportune time in my career," he added.

Several members of the Board of Governors still appeared skeptical about the decision which may lead to quick resignations from McGill's senior body.

"Opportune my foot," commented one member upon hearing of Mr. Wagner's statement.

"Career my foot," screamed another.

"You're standing on my foot", squealed a weeping Howard Ross.

According to Governor J. C. Finlayson, Mr. Wagner's credentials leave nothing to be desired for a university like McGill in an 'emerging' Quebec.

He cited Mr. Wagner's courageous crusades against organized crime at Expo 67 and non-police violence in the streets of Quebec and bedrooms of the nation.

Commenting on the backroom manoeuvring which led to Mr. Wagner's selection, veteran political analyst and McGill vice-principal Robert Shaw stuttered, "there was friction among the factions, one faction even had trouble with its diction, with each incumbent section striving for perfection..."

Mr. Shaw, who was too confused to continue, had to be helped from the room. However, old engineering crony Johnny 'Beaver' Newman pointed out that Shaw had already disqualified himself from the competition because he was not an academic.

Ex-McGill Chancellor Ross summarized the nature of the Board of Governors' factionalism in a pithy "Well, there was one side, and then there was the other side. All we could do was pick someone who irritated everybody equally."

Commenting on the Board's plans for the principal-elect, one Governor stated anonymously "If Wagner can't do the job, my name isn't Stewart Finlayson."

"In fact, Wagner is just the man we need to implement our new pacification program. We would like him to shape the principal's office to fit his personality. He will of course have the full co-operation of buildings and grounds personnel."

"I would like to see him start by re-organizing the Barnes guards into an élite anti-riot squad."

Chaudhuri gets out!

by MARCUS KUNIAN

A six-month radical student campaign to oust Centre for Developing Area Studies lecturer General J.N. Chaudhuri has finally succeeded.

The former Indian Army chief-of-staff left Quebec this morning on an Aer Lingam jet bound for Dublin.

Speaking to a hastily convened press conference at the Park Avenue Krishna Consciousness Temple, the blood-shot General vowed never to return a book he borrowed from Centre fellow Arnold August.

"I am through with Quebec and McGill", said Chaudhuri. "I am sick and tired of being hounded as a running dog of imperialism. The treatment I have received at the hands of agrarian scum such as Eric Hoffman is enough to make any man howl."

Hoffman, who attended the conference disguised as a Canadian Army second lieutenant, was incensed at the remark.

"I am an oppressed member of the industrial bourgeois system and not an agrarian-comrade," said the undergraduate student.

According to General Chaudhuri, possible future plans for the former lecturer include a vacation of British brass-rubbing at Belfast and a possible teaching appointment at the American military academy, West Point.

"I believe my unfortunate experience over the last few months have left me eminently qualified to lecture on the role of the military in developed societies," he said.

However, Chaudhuri also revealed that he is considering a return to active military service with the Boy Scouts of India.

"As we say at Sandhurst," he said, "give me a boy and we'll make you." General Chaudhuri spent several days at the famous British military school before he was forced to leave with a severe case of beri-beri and acne.

When informed of the possibility of General Chaudhuri's re-entry into activity, a traumatic Arnold August vowed from his Chicoutimi jail-cell that "such an oppressive act shall not go unprotected."

"We know that General Chaudhuri's departure is part of the colonialist plot of arbitrary Principal Robertson and his white Indian lackeys."

"When such a fascist swine bites the dust," said the activist American, "it's obviously part of their continuing efforts to dispossess agrarian comrades of their birthright."

"As a member of the McGill Student Rearguard, I am making a non-negotiable demand that this militarist get back into Quebec."

General Chaudhuri reacted to August's statement with typical military reservations.

"Their charges are as groundless as a lost polo ball", he screamed.

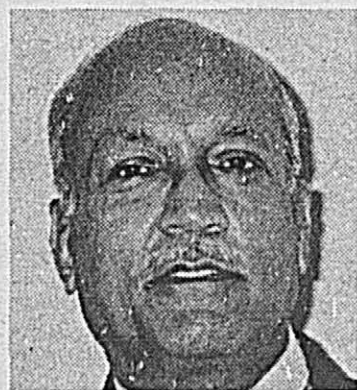

"I have always taken comfort from the old Indian proverb that 'When the elephant shakes his tail, great things are in the offing'. In my mind, the McGill Student Rearguard is but the tail of an immature Tantor."

Before he departed on his flight, General Chaudhuri bid a tearful goodbye to McGill Principal Roche Robertson and CDAS head Irving Brecher.

He presented the two with handcrafted trinkets representing Sara, the goddess of death and necrophiliacs.

"As we say in my country," he muttered, "when the Indian gives the white man a trinket, the tail of the elephant quivers".

Although Principal Robertson was speechless with relief, Professor Brecher managed to blurt out a brief tribute.

Malone resigns; cassock too short

by PAUL LUTFY

Father Patrick Malone, President of Loyola College, resigned his post last night before an emergency meeting of the College Senate.

Although the reason for his resignation was said to be ill-health, the announcement came not long after secret meetings were held between Father Malone and the Superior-General of the Society of Jesus in Avignon, France.

Secrecy shrouded the meetings, but reliable sources reported that the Superior-General asked the Jesuit father to resign due to infractions of the order's moral discipline code and to incipient exhibitionism.

Apparently, the length of the cassock worn by the President of the College is five inches from the floor, which is two inches more than current regulations permit.

The Superior-General of the Jesuit order attributed the mini-length as a direct source of excitement and antagonism to the College's students, who have recently staged vociferous demonstrations during appearances of the Father.

Student sources agreed that, with Malone gone, the steamy atmosphere at Loyola would cool down, and plans are now underway to find a suitable successor. Father John O'Brien, Vice-President of the College, and Pope Paul VI have both been nominated.

Commenting on the nominations, Marcel Nouvet, former President of the Loyola Student Association admitted that neither of the two men would appease the students or ease conflict on the campus. "However, some like it hot," he added, and endorsed the candidacies of both churchmen.

David Allnutt, Editor of the Loyola News, greeted the parting of Father Malone with the comment, "There is nothing like a well-turned ankle to put the Church in the lurch."

New coins will talk Sarah H. uncovers Young

The Royal Mint announced yesterday that all coins minted from now on would have "Talkers" stamped on them instead of the usual animal figures.

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau declared, "The new coins will promote cultural exchange all over the country. The wonderful Talkers idea of a McGill student will probably lead to the end of Canadian silence and stupidity."

"We don't want a feeble Silent Majority similar to that in the elephant to our South," he added.

Under the new program, Canadian coins now in existence will be phased out of circulation by offering a 10% premium on them in exchange for the new coins.

by WILLA MARCUS

Internal Vice-President Dave Young has been revealed as a former preppie and frat man in a political scandal that threatens to destroy the Students' Society.

Young apparently graduated from Toronto's Upper Canada College, Canada's most exclusive private boys' school, in 1966 and spent his first four years at McGill as an active member of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

The revelation was made by Sarah Humphrey, BA 1, who was defeated by Young in last year's executive elections. Miss Humphrey, speaking from her jail cell where she is serving a sentence for contempt of court in the Sir George Williams University computer case, said that she has known of Young's aristocratic background for some time.

"I've withheld the information until now because I always feared physical reprisals from Young," she claimed. "Now that I have the protection of the law, I feel safe to condemn his anti-people heritage."

Young was a cadet sergeant during his five years at Upper Canada College. The UCC cadet battalion is the only one in Canada that has earned battle colours.

The award was conferred in 1865 for the battalion's role in defending the city of Toronto from the Fenian raids.

The Internal Vice-President also played football at UCC and still bears a grudge against Daily News Editor Ian Urquhart as a result of his gridiron career. Apparently Urquhart broke Young's leg during a match on UCC's luxurious grounds.

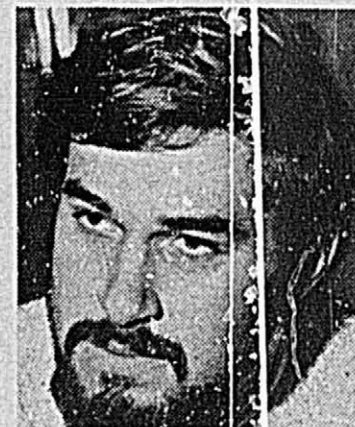

Young did not particularly mind the fact that his leg was broken, but he was annoyed because he and Urquhart were actually playing on the same team at the time.

Young was initiated into Lambda Chi Alpha at the fraternity's training seminar in Muncie, Indiana, in 1967.

His life at the fraternity was highlighted by his participation in the campaign for Westmount Liberal C. M. "Bud" Drury during the 1968 federal elections.

Daily ed. to do MSEA P.R.

Daily Editor Charles Krauthammer has accepted a position as permanent public relations director for the McGill Student Entrepreneurial Agencies, effective immediately after his graduation in May this year.

MSEA President Dick Pomerantz said, "We chose Krauthammer because of his extensive experience in the field of communications."

"The MSEA needs a man who knows the media industry and can work well with people in the field," concluded Pomerantz.

Krauthammer was reluctant at first, but eventually offered, "Look, the job pays well and I am the duly-elected editor, so that's final. The MSEA is a sophisticated body and worthy of my presence."

Sex-gambling scandal rocks gym

Mooney goes to Texas

by TED KOY

Confronted with McGill's worst athletic scandal in its history, football-basketball coach Tom Mooney has resigned his posts in disgust to become assistant coach to the University of Texas' Darrell Royal.

The move can only be seen as a step up for Mooney, who miraculously escapes the slime of scandal at McGill to join the staff of the number one college football team in the United States, the Texas Longhorns.

The University of Texas team went through its regular season schedule undefeated last year and then defeated the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame in the Cotton Bowl New Year's Day to become the undisputed national champion.

"I'm glad to be leaving McGill and I'm ecstatic over my appointment to UT," commented the usually taciturn Mooney yesterday. "I never did like McGill — this place anyway — there are too many cruddy pinkos."

"With this disgusting gambling-sex scandal going on on MY football team, think what the rest of the campus must be doing," continued the frenzied coach.

"This sort of thing would not happen at UT — the boys there cut their hair and talk to President Nixon and attend pep rallies and drink beer," he concluded.

Longhorn coach Royal was pleased with the snaring of Mooney. "Now I have the first rate coaching staff I want to start rebuilding my team for next year," he declared.

Commenting on the scandal at McGill, Royal said, "I'm sure Tom could not have been involved in that mess — he's too dumb. We checked him out pretty good and we think he can conform to the UT tradition.

THE MOONER
Leavin' on a jet plane

"You'll notice that we screen all our players too," added Royal. "For instance, if you scan our roster, you won't find any black boys."

President Richard Nixon, an avid Longhorn fan who granted the UT team the number one honours in the nation with his presidential prerogative, said, "Let me make this one thing perfectly clear: UT is the number one team in the nation."

"I know this because I am the President and I spend all my time watching college football games," he said.

"I hope I have made myself perfectly clear," the President concluded.

Redmen threw Vanier Cup

by DICKIE ADAMS

The wildest scandal in the history of Collegiate sports has been uncovered at McGill. Confirmed sources in the Montreal underworld have indicated that the Vanier Cup game, symbolic of national football supremacy, was thrown by the McGill Redmen. It may be recalled that the victors on that cold November evening were the Manitoba Bisons, who struck early and held on by a score of 24-15.

Three of this city's leading bookies, who invested close to $2.5-million in picking the University of Manitoba squad by an eight point spread, have been arrested. Angelo Kappizza, former political supplement editor for the Mafia newsletter, Luigi "Baby Face" Bananas, ex-fruit tycoon, and Giuseppe "Chain Gang" Costi, previously Union brothel curator, have all been indicated as the principals in the sex-gambling slime.

The main Redman involved thus far appears to be Sal LoVecchio, intimately known to former friends as "the Wedge." LoVecchio missed three field goals and one convert that would have supplied enough points for a Redmen triumph.

Before a coast to coast TV audience of close to 10 million and a Varsity Stadium crowd of 15,000, the Wedge pulled one real beaut which instigated the RCMP investigation. LoVecchio not only failed on a 17 yard field goal attempt but kicked the ball backwards by 30 yards on a second quarter placement.

LoVecchio, who has been estimated to have grossed over 35 gees on the shady deal, was unavailable for comment but his mother attempted to lend some insight into the "good-boy-gone-rotten" syndrome: "We gave Salie everything, we even bronzed his first jock strap, but somewhere we must have failed him."

The entire defensive unit is under suspicion of having engaged in sexual intercourse on the eve of the contest against the strictest orders from head coach Tom Mooney. Besides being drained of valuable energy several individuals were bribed to miss tackles on the first two Manitoba touchdowns in the first quarter. To make the onslaught even more credible, they also blew several other tackles later in the game, although preventing deep penetrations.

A late release from RCMP sergeant Pierre LaPlouffe suggests that Redmen halfback Dave Doherty was promised a new pair of sneakers if he dropped every pass thrown his way. "In reviewing the game films, we clearly saw Doherty let two touchdowns slip through his fingers in the end zone," claimed Sgt. LaPlouffe.

Team-mate Bill McKenna denied the possibility of Doherty's involvement in giving a brief character reference: "He's too dumb."

All of McGill's coaches, including head master Tom Mooney, came out of the affair lily-white and have been cleared of all connections. Mooney is still in a state of shock and was unavailable for a cliché.

The investigation into the grime continues, and all results imply that McGill athletes may never sweat again.

Name of the game

by BOB WALLACE

Charges of "fascist" and "Capitalist pig" thundered in the Board of Governors meeting yesterday when a motion, presented by Principal Rocke Robertson, called for the changing of the University's name from "The Royal Institution for the Advancement of Learning" to simply "McGill University".

Principal Robertson tearfully testified that he had trouble remembering the present title. "McGill University is so much shorter and nicer," he said.

Chris Portner, Senate representative, argued that it would be a great injustice to the students if the name were changed: "Only over my dead body will this motion pass."

Stuart Finlayson, Chairman of the Board, called Portner a "kindergarten dropout" and insisted that Portner be returned his Board of Governors membership dues.

Portner retorted that he would not vote for Mr. Finlayson when his name came up for the Chancellorship of the Royal Institution. "See if I care," was Mr. Finlayson's answer.

Michael Oliver, Vice-Principal (Academic), said he agreed with Principal Rocke Robertson. "I always agree with the Principal," he commented.

Stanley Frost, Vice-Principal (Professional Affairs), was the most eloquent opponent of the motion. "The vicious and premeditated removal of 'Royal' from the title is another hideous example of creeping Republicanism," he charged.

The Honourable John Diefenbaker, past Prime Minister of Canada, said simply that he liked the Queen and would, therefore, vote against the motion. At this point, Dr. Frost ran over to kiss Mr. Diefenbaker. Then Dr. Oliver rushed out of the room. He later revealed he went to the PP room.

At this point, Portner shouted, "Hurrah!" and Principal Robertson fainted.

The Board of Governors then decided to table the motion.

Synchronized swimming, a ballet in water, is the most graceful and physically demanding of all the water sports. And dainty Natz checking in at 45,23,46 combines beauty with sinewy strength.

Coming from her native Val d'Or, N.B. in 1960 Natz in her freshman year won the all-Canada synchronized swimming meet by executing a perfect inverted hang while replacing the top of her suit which had slipped off.

"I really let it all hang out on that one," Anatolia commented as she chewed on an Ovaltine lozenge after a tough practice session.

I've always been natural in the water. A sort of water nympho, I mean nymph," Natz giggled.

Natz added, "my biggest problem is that the chlorine in the pool reacts with my vaginal deodorant and gives me a terrible rash."

Anatolia's biggest challenge comes next week when she takes on Irena Turetsky, the great Russian swimmer in the Croatian Institute of Anatomical Studies Pool.
